We have scores of letters commending our stock, yet the following extract from a letter written by Robert Douglas, of Waukegan, Illinois, (who stands at the head of the forest growing in this country) to the Rural New Yorker, last fall, without our knowledge or solicitation, is all we care to publish here, viz:

"I visited the York Nurseries at Fort Scott, last week. Four wagons were hauling off the apples to the station. Ten thousand bushels sold at forty cents per bushel, every apple a good specimen apparently. I examined large piles, and saw no inferior fruit. This nursery company, by the way, demands more than a passing notice. Six energetic men compose the firm, all working harmoniously together. They ship from Texas to Dakota, so that they can ship from January till April or May, and from October till December. When I passed Fort Scott, the first week in March, they were shipping car loads; but I did not have the pleasure of visiting their nurseries until last week, where I saw blocks of one and two-year-old apple trees, numbering hundreds of thousands, and such beautiful trees! One and two-year-olds as large as two, three and even four-year-olds farther east. One-year old trees may be seen by the hundred thousand three to five feet high; also full blocks of plums, peaches, quinces, etc. From all appearances they are doing as large a business as any nursery in the country, and are doing a good work for a great extent of territory. They are honorable, efficient men, and it is a pleasure to see such men doing such a lucrative business. They seem to be located in a nurserymens' paradise—no killing winters and six months' shipping season."

[Signed.] R. Douglas.
